HOW TO REDUCE VARICOSE VEINS

Many people have become dependent upon the use of the varicocele belt. There is no remedy that will reduce the veins and swellings.

If you will get a two-piece original bandage, the famous "Emerald" (full strength) at any first class drug store and apply it to the legs and thighs, it will quickly reduce the veins and swellings and prevent them from returning.

"Emerald" is extensively used in hospitals and is famous as first aid to the swollen leg. It is a harmless, yet most powerful remedy, and two pieces last a very long time.

Reduced, as powerful as "Emerald" that it is, it is used in the war, and is the only remedy that will reduce the veins and swellings and prevent them from returning. A general agent for the "Emerald" is at 150, in stamps or silver from Moore Chemical Co., Rochester, N. Y., A.D.T.

GIRL WHO CONFESSED FALSELY TELLS HOW MARINO WAS SLAIN

Louisa Macaluso, nineteen, who once confessed to the murder of Giuseppe Marino, for whose killing on April 18, 1914, William Flack is now on trial before Judge Crain in General Sessions, began to-day to tell to the jury what she now swears is the real story of the murder.

It is the story upon which the Grand Jury last week indicted Angelo Leggio, who, the girl said, induced Flack to shoot Marino and later persuaded her to confess to the crime.

Disguised as a boy, the girl disappeared immediately after the murder, and the police did not get her until she went to the house where the murder was committed to get some female attire.

Louisa, a mere slip of a girl but pretty, went on the witness stand at 11.15 o'clock. She was attired in a jaunty little gown and wore a black velvet hat with a wreath of gay flowers which contrasted strikingly with her blond hair.

She said she was aware that she was under indictment for the murder of Marino. She identified an affidavit which she made yesterday waiving immunity, and upon questions from Judge Crain said that she fully understood what she had done. She declared that she had been promised nothing in return for her testimony.

Louisa said that she would be nineteen next May and that she had married when she was fourteen. Her husband's name was Frank Macaluso. D. Marino, whom she met later, she said, she had known as Dominick.

She went to live at No. 34 East Thirtieth Street with Leggio, and Marino visited her there. The night of the murder, the girl said, Marino and she were eating when Angelo Leggio appeared with Flack and two other men.

All bowed their heads, she said, when Leggio snapped his fingers, but she did not understand. All the men except Marino left.

She said that about midnight the five men returned. Flack pulled a revolver and by the light from a small jet in the kitchen he saw him shoot Marino.

DETECTIVES FOIL PLOT TO ROB GIRL CASHIER OF HER $500 PAYROLL

Detectives Quinn, Riley and Kelly, passing through Baxter Street, near Police Headquarters, at noon to-day, saw three shifty-eyed Italian boys in conference in a doorway.

One of the boys slipped a revolver to another and the detectives promptly arrested all three and took them to the Central Office.

They said they were Peter Caterina of No. 324 Lafayette Street, Nicholas Albrino, No. 285 Lafayette Street, and Nicholas Vetrano, No. 117 Mulberry Street, each eighteen years old.

Albrino, whose elder brother John is in Sing Sing for safe-blowing, had the revolver, which had been given him by Caterina. Under Caterina's vest was found a crudely lettered sign on cardboard reading "Elevator Not Running."

"What were you going to do with the gun and the sign?" the boys were asked.

"We were going to stick up a girl cashier at Sixth Avenue and Tenth Street and get $500," replied Caterina, calmly.

The boy explained that he learned two weeks ago that Sadie Rillberger, who, the police subsequently learned, lives at No. 8813 Bay Sixteenth Street, Bath Beach, is in the habit of going every Friday at 1 o'clock to the bank and drawing the payroll of $500 for Brick & Ballerstein, paper box manufacturers, on the third floor at Sixth Avenue and Tenth Street. She is the cashier.

Caterina planned to hold her up. He went to the building last Friday. The presence of several policemen in front of Jefferson Market Police Court, across the street, scared him and two other boys off. These two boys dropped the project and Caterina enlisted the aid of Albrino and Vetrano. Their plan was to wait until Miss Rillberger, carrying the money, was approaching the building when one of the trio was to enter the elevator and ride to the top floor. The others were to slip the sign on the elevator shaft with the idea that Miss Rillberger would start to walk up to the shop. They were to wait in a dark hall on the second floor, get the money and run.

"Suppose she resisted?" asked a detective.

"Well," said Caterina, "then we'd have to beat her up, but we didn't mean to shoot her. We were going to use the gun to scare her."

The boys were sent to the Criminal Courts Building to allow the District Attorney to frame a charge against them.

Miss Rillberger, when told of the plot, decided that she would pass the job of carrying the payroll to some male employee.

WOMEN UNABLE TO OPEN CITY BUILDING DOORS

Five thousand city employees in the Municipal Building, as well as countless hundreds who have business in the building daily, were inconvenienced to-day by the locking of the doors on the west side of the building.

F. W. Perry, engineer in charge of the structure, to-day admitted the present entrance arrangement is a failure, because of the difficulty in opening the doors, due to suction and tremendous air pressure. The wind currents easterly or westerly have great force when sweeping along Chambers Street.

Women are frequently powerless to pull or push the doors open, because of the resistance, which Mr. Perry estimates is at times twenty-two pounds pressure to a square foot, equivalent to the force of an eighty-mile gale. Revolving doors may be substituted, and if these don't meet the difficulty it may be necessary to build vestibules at the entrance.
